

Commenting on the assessment by PPBM chief strategist Rais Hussin that the ruling coalition would face defeat if a general election were called now, she admitted that there were still a lot of weaknesses among inexperienced ministers.

"It is only a year and a half, but the Cabinet is shaping up very well now.

"Give us two years to clean up internal matters, bureaucracy and the government servants' mentality. Then, we can prioritise the issues under each ministry.

"After two years, we should be able to move forward with our programmes and activities."
